Tech Tips : Protect Yourself Against Fraudulent Emails

Over the last few months, Integricity has identified a significant increase in fraudulent emails circulating among the Internet community.

These fraudulent emails have been professionally crafted so that the content and presentation imitate emails which are legitimately sent by "actual" organizations such as financial institutions, online trading communities, businesses, solutions providers and other utility vendors.

The purpose of these fraudulent emails are always malicious in nature. Using deception, these parties intend to achieve one or more of the following:

- I Create unnecessary panic
- I Obtain private information including username and passwords
- I Attempt to transfer funds and credits from your account to theirs
- I Damage the data within your computer using viruses, trojans and worms
